TELEFRONE No. 12.

Hongkons, July 31st, 1889.

Owcz more the Yellow River has burst its banks, devestating a large tract of country, and again justifying its appellation of "China's Sorrow," This time the scene of the calamity is in Shantung, some bundred and twenty miles from the mouth of the river. The breach that occurred in 1887 was at Cheng-chow, in Honen, and the scenes of the two disasters are therefore separated by several hundred miles. The Chinese succeeded in closing the Cheng-chow breach and bringing the vast stream back into the bed it had .deserted. This work, as an engineering feat, reflects lustre on the name of Wo Ta-carne, the official who, after previous efforts had failed, successfully accomplished it. But before the river was turned back into its old to leave London on the 20th June. She brings ed a careful survey to sacertain that the banks along the whole length were strong enough to contain it, so that the closing of Pac-ching, sister ship to the Pac-hao, built by 25th of the Chinese moon, or, according to our and due form, have agreed upon the following lancholy, the juvenile inhabitants of the Celestical juent a birth located in a wood, near which a the Cheng-chow breach should not result, as has unfortunately turned out to be the case. in the more transfer of the trouble to another district. Not only should prudence have suggested this, but the Government had explicit warning of the danger from its owe officials. In the Peking Gasette of the 10th April appeared a memorial from the were cruising in Korean waters, and on account Governor of Shantung in which he reports with over ten vessels of the Northern and Souththat "Two years ago the Governor proposed ern Squadrons to protect the Hermit Kingdom tent of the disaster. The Nile, the Ganges, the Volga, the Rhine, and many other great rivers, including the Canton river, divide into reveral branches before their términation, this being due in some cases to the nature of the ground and in others to the fact of the velocity of the stream being so much diminished in its latter stage that even a slight obstacle | 116. has power to change its course and a number of channels are thus produced. In reference to the Yellow River the theory has heen advanced that the outlet has become obstructed by the accumulation of silt deposited by the stream about its mouth. Every broach in the banks of a river betokens obstruction of some kind further down the stream. Where a river. after leaving its mountainque basin, has to flow through a long stretch of level country. it is necessarily dependent on the pressure of the water behind to create a current, and having little or no natural fall in the direction of its bed it will break through its embankments wherever a weak anot is to be found. To allow it to divide into different channels would naturally cause a more rapid and imparting strength and vigour to the system. How and relieve the pressure on the banks higher up the stream. We have only to imagine what would be the effect of an attempt to confine the Canton river to one channel only in the latter part of its course, to understand the trouble with the Tellow

The education of sons is treated in a leading ctiolo and fault is found with those parents who instead of recognising their own responsibility in that their sons have sequired corrupt habits, throw the whole cous of the blame upon the teachers, in whose charge they were placed during the prosecution of their studies.

The entrance and passage to the Examination Hall have been repaired and steps taken to pre vent the accumulation of mud and the exposure to the sun.

The difference between the head earpenters and the men in their employ has been settled it the Nanhai Magistrate. The men are so far satisfied with the decision that a petition has been presented, praising his excellence and ability. Repairs are about to be taken in hand in a temple in the city, at the expense of a Manila lottery gambler who vowed to the joss that he would pay for the necessary outlay if he won a prize. The man has now come in for over $8,000.

A military official deputed by the Vicercy to proceed to Macao has brought back seven noto rious characters, who were rendited by the Portuguese authorities.

Three pirates connected with the famous Lin Ah-chip, were arrested at Macao. They had Bye-laws under sub-section 6 of section 13 of Or | boarded a passenger boat in the hope of extorting blackmail

A grand procession is about to take place at Shao-ching consequent upon the opening of murble bridge. Robbers are, however, trying to reap a harvest on this occasion, and have already demanded a heavy sum before the procession is allowed to go without interference.

About at 7.15 p.m. on the 16th July, a kerosens-laden lighter anchored just outside the mouth of the eastern camber caught fire, probably owing to the coolies on board smoking, If the cases that were first ignited had been pitched overboard, as we are assured there was no difficulty or danger in doing, the remainder of the cargo might have been saved. However the coolies attempted to sink the boat, the resul being that in a short time burning kerosene presd along the bilges and the entire contents of the lighter were guickly a mass of flame The blazing oil spread over the Water with incred ble rapidity, but was kept back from the camber ov showers of sand thrown from bosts that an roached as closely as massible, and as the barning lighter was towed further out into the harbour and there sunk all danger to the craft in the camly eleven o'clook, and while they larted lighted up a weird and beautiful effect.—Hyogo News.

CHINESE CHARACTERISTICS.

THE ABSENCE OF SINCERITY. One of the ways in which the nalive insincerity of the Chinese is most characteristically manifested, is their demeanour towards children, who are taught to be insincere, without conscionaness of the fact either on their own part, or on the part of those who teach them. Before he is old s cugh to talk, and when he can attach only the vacuest significance to the words which he hears, a child is told that unless he does us is bid, some terrific object, said to be concealed in the sleeve of a grown person, will catch him. ber was averted. Soliman Sabi was the full title of the patri archal Musspiman who has gone to his rest after an earthly pilgrimage of 130 years. His descendants are many; but they are all of the third and succeeding generations. He had seven wives, all of whom, live his sons and daughters, died before him. There were six boys in the family to nine girls—a strange disproportion. This old Turk was vigorous and active up to the end of his extreme life. Hard work and simple living seem to have been the secret in enabling Saba to nearly double the allotted spen: He was a strictor regetarian than many who are classed under that name. Except on occasions of high festival-and even then never oftener than twice a vear—barley bread, beans and water made up his diet. Follett was retained as course on one side and Blaule on the other. Shortly before the case came on. Foliatt strolled into the kitchen of the House of Commons (to which the Bar had always access in the day-time) and called for a biscuit and a glass of sherry. To his surprise he saw Maule sitting at a table with a rumpsteak and huge flagou of stont before him, to the consumption of both of which he was applying bimself with the most exemplary assiduity. Follett could not help expressing to his opponent his surprise at seeing him indulging in so solid and carnal a diet by way of a preparative for the task he was about to enter upon and for which a clear unclouded brain was so essential. "As to clearness of brain." said Maule. "I find that mine is too clear slready. The truth is I am striving to bring my intellept down to a level with the capacity of those idiote judges.
